DESCRIPTION

The narrow form of this cultivar of Katsuratree makes it easier to utilize on smaller sites. Heart-shaped, deep purple foliage in spring has a heavier substance than the species, which may help the foliage be less susceptible to late spring freezes.

The leaves mature to a bronzy-green color during the summer, finally displaying apricot-orange and bronze tones in autumn. The foliage emits a pleasant sugary odor as they drop in the fall.

Plant Red Fox[®] in full sun in an area with consistent moisture. This is a lovely small tree that will provide several seasons of color in the garden.
